

The FCC should not allow more broad ownership of media, as is being considered presently. We already have severely limited choices in this country compared even to earlier this century, and the health of our democracy is at stake.

The lack of media coverage to the general population too, on this issue, and that fact that it is being debated, is a prime example of why such expansion is dangerous. Only a PBS special brought this information out in a timely fashion.

The limit on broadcast ownership is there for a good reason, and the reason still exists. Please do not let the power and influence of major owners, and their desire for rampant expansion, to influence a matter of this consequence in violation of the ideals under which this limit was established.
